Nuha,

I understand you're asking for additional Christmas money. I want to be transparent about where things stand financially.

I have not been making money from Perfected Claims. I paused work while focusing on this divorce, and I'm hoping I receive a check from Perfected in January for work I did this month—but as of today, that money has not come in. Over the last four months, the only income I've earned was $6,000 from a different event.

Given everything, the most I can do for Christmas right now is $750 via Zelle.

For clarity, here is what I have paid/covered recently:

- Your health insurance
- Your car insurance
- Your car payment
- Phones
- $3,100.00 paid to you directly
- $750 via Zelle (Christmas money)
- $300 reimbursed to Mia
- $100 cash for gas
- Approximately $1,400 in Amazon spending (paid by me)

- $11,000 paid to your lawyers

We spent all our savings on legal and related expenses. I'm trying to stabilize month-to-month, and I can't commit to additional money right now beyond what I'm already paying.

I do feel bad that this is stressful, but at this point you need to work so there's steady income on your side too. To help make that possible, I can pick up the kids from school until you get off work, and you can also work weekends if needed.

Send me your work schedule (days/hours) and what pickup coverage you need so we can set it consistently.
